Bergeson & Campbell, P.C. is pleased to present a Webinar on

EPA TSCA Compliance Strategies for Nanoscale Materials

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is committed to assisting manufacturers and importers of nanoscale materials and other nanotechnology stakeholders understand and comply with the complexities of the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA).

Bergeson & Campbell, P.C. is deeply involved in the law, regulation, and science policy implications of nanotechnology.

This Webinar will provide an overview of the basics in TSCA compliance with respect to new nanoscale chemical substances that require the submission of a pre-manufacture notification with EPA.

This Webinar will help you:

- Understand EPA's approach for classifying nanoscale materials as new or existing chemical substances.
- Learn about the TSCA process for placing new chemical substances on the TSCA Inventory.
- Learn about the current and future status of EPA's nanotechnology program.
- Understand the business and commercial implications of non-compliance.
- Consider strategies for supporting compliance and reducing enforcement vulnerability.

Hosted by: Lynn L. Bergeson (Bergeson & Campbell, P.C.)

Speakers: Jim Willis (EPA, Director, Chemical Control Division), Greg Schweer (EPA, Chief, New Chemicals Notice Management Branch), Jim Alwood (EPA, Program Manager), Kristan Markey (EPA, Program Manager), Zofia Kosim (EPA, Program Manager), Miriam Wiggins-Lewis (EPA, Senior Pre-notice Coordinator), and Kent Anapolle (EPA, Chemist)

Who should attend: Representatives from nanoscale material, chemical, and other product manufacturers.
